SAPROF

The Structured Assessment of Protective Factors

1-day Training – Thursday, 18\textsuperscript{th} October 2012

University of Manchester 9:15am-4:30pm

Course Fee: £190

All learning materials, SAPROF manual, lunch and refreshments are included in course fee. Provided following instruction and authorisation by the SAPROF authors.

Facilitator: Dr Michael Doyle, University of Manchester

Programme Director for forensic masters course & Project Manager for national forensic study using the SAPROF. Governance and risk role at Greater Manchester West NHS Trust. Wide and varied research experience and he has published widely on psychosocial risk assessment, formulation, management and training. \textit{New findings from the largest research study to use the SAPROF will be presented.}

\textbf{Workshop Summary}

The SAPROF was developed as a tool for the structured assessment of protective factors for violence risk. The SAPROF is a structured professional judgement checklist designed to be used in combination with other structured risk assessment tools like the HCR-20.

The addition of the structured assessment of protective factors creates a more balanced risk assessment for future violence risk, enabling a more positive approach to violence prevention and aiding formulation, evaluation and risk communication.

The SAPROF will be introduced and participants will be trained in using the SAPROF. Advantages of protective factors for risk assessment and risk management will be discussed and research evidence for the SAPROF will be presented. \textit{New findings from the largest research study to use the SAPROF will be presented.}

\textbf{Learning Outcomes}

Following the training participants will be able to:

- Outline the background to risk assessment in mental health services.
- Discuss the potential benefits of considering protective factors in risk assessment, formulation and management.
- Understand the rationale for using the SAPROF.
- Discuss new research findings from the UK.
- Use the SAPROF in clinical practice & research.
